

Everybody is different.

Some people are active and outgoing, other people are quiet and like to work alone.

How can we help all of our students learn effectively?
How can we give multiple exposures to vocabulary?

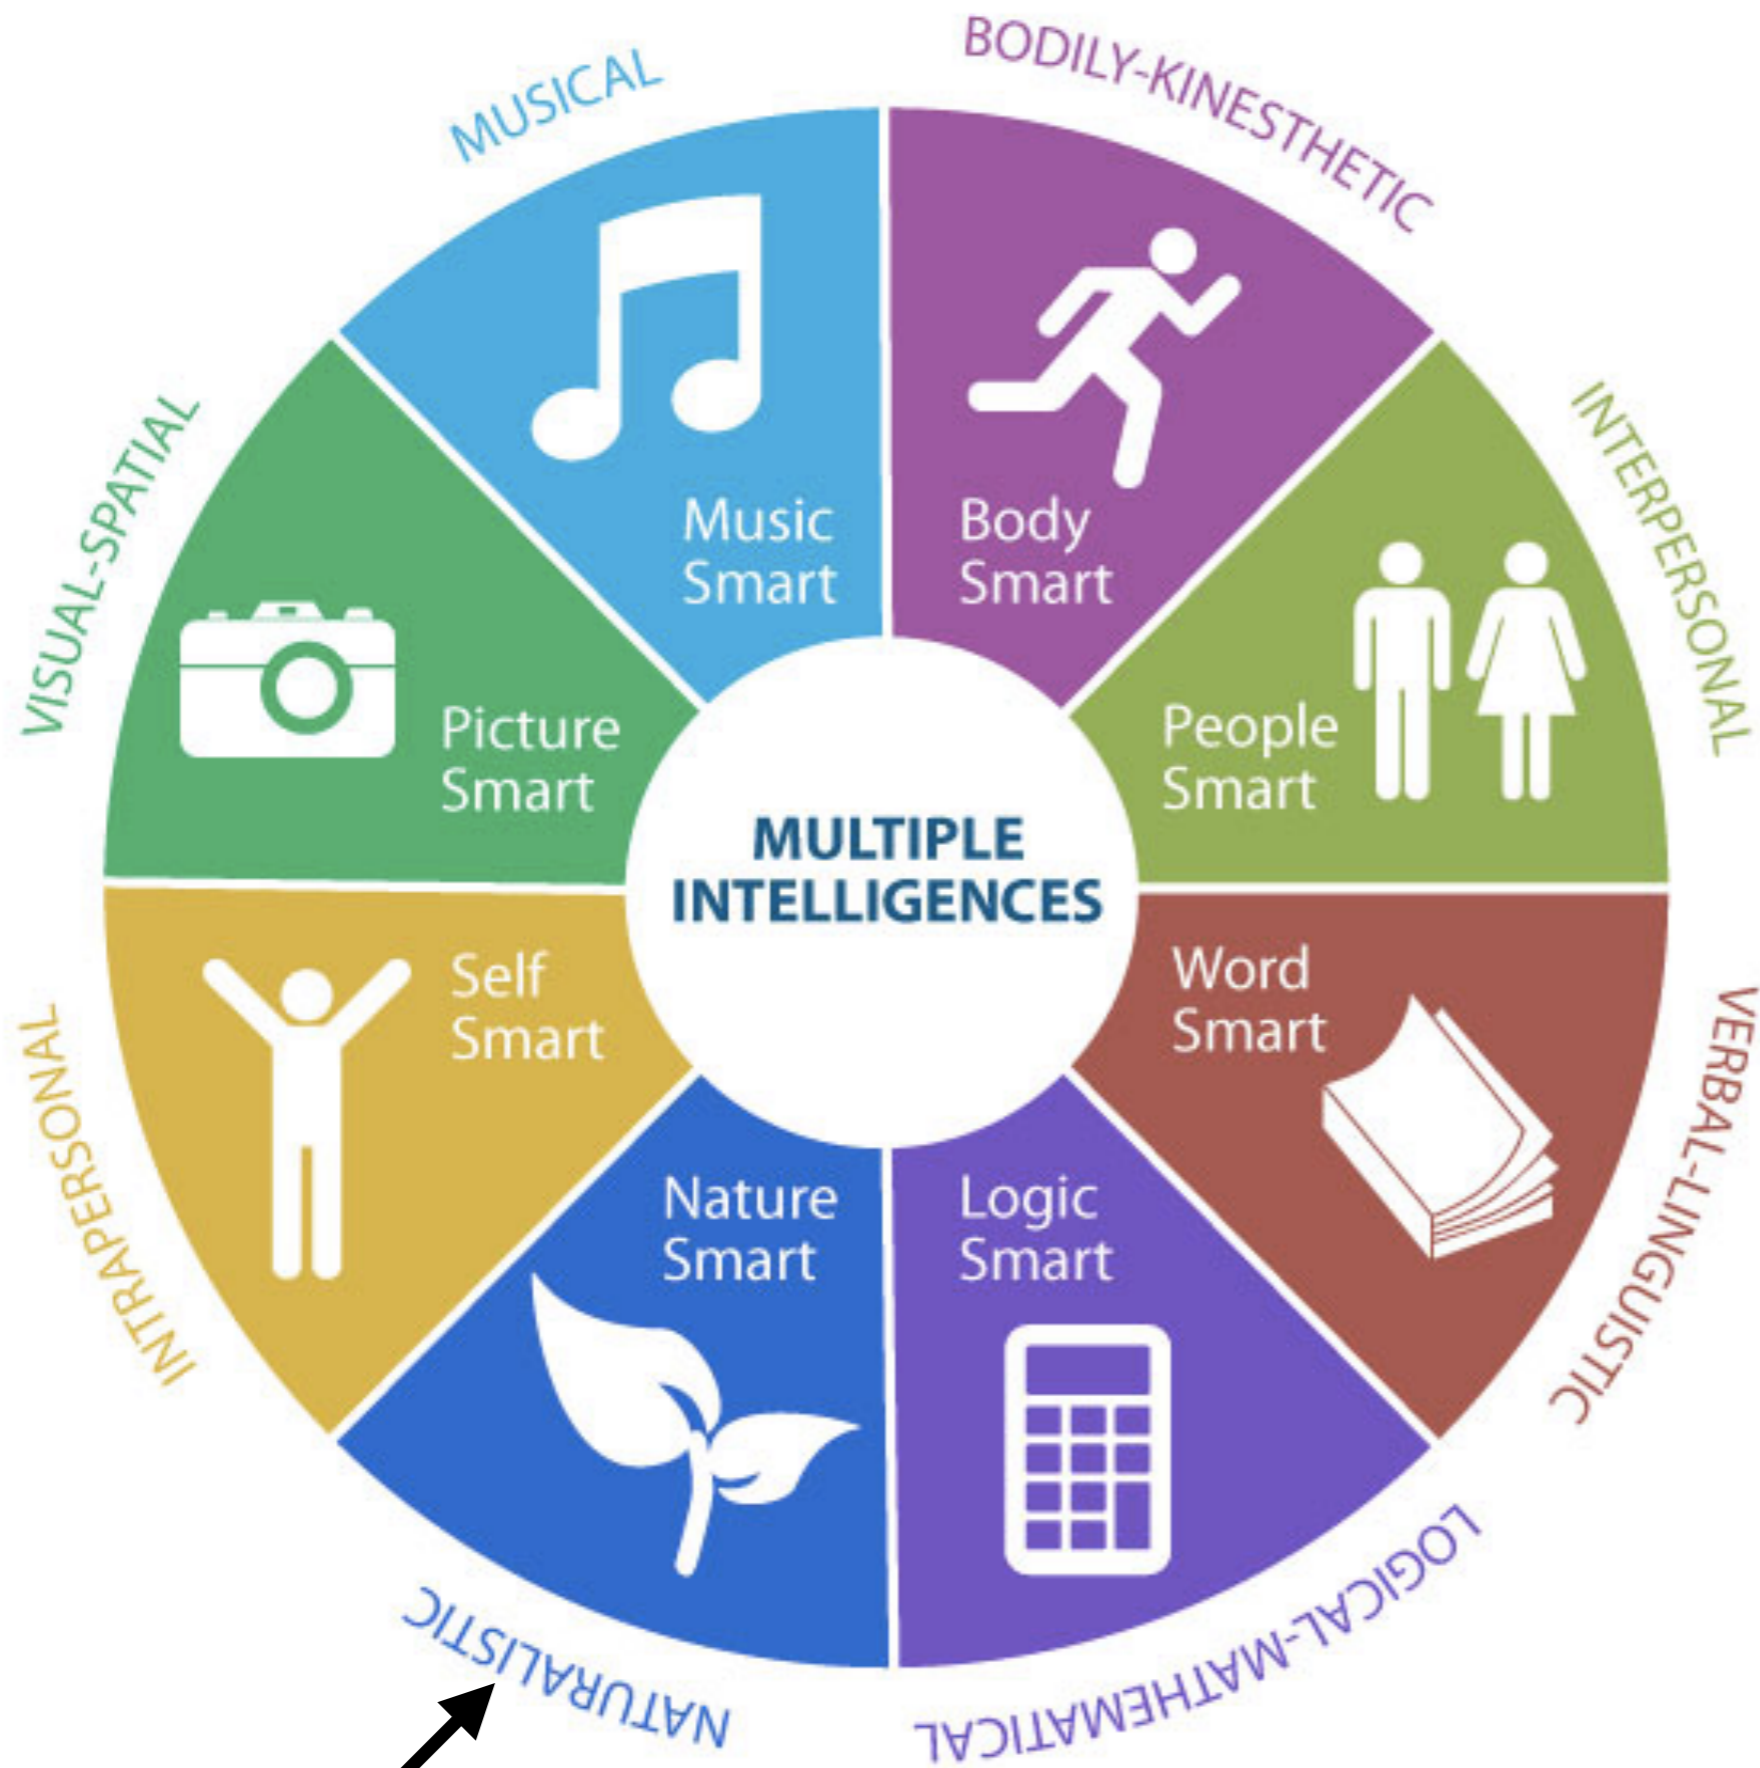

Multiple Intelligences

“... students learn, remember, perform, and understand in different ways...”

- Gardner (1991)

Why should teachers think about multiple intelligences?

- create variety in your lesson and activities
- personalize your teaching to the interests and needs of students added new!

Image from:
Connections Academy
www.connectionsacademy.com

Multiple Intelligences

Choose which multiple intelligences fit with these activities:

1. Create a picture dictionary with the new words.
2. Read a story and then draw a map of places in the story.
3. Create sign language for each new word.
4. Do a cryptogram.
5. Create a rap from the story.
6. Do a treasure hunt with hidden objects.
7. Create a body map by tracing each other's body parts.
8. Look on Daum/Naver/Google maps to find places in the world.
9. Write new lyrics or a new verse for a song.
10. Create a board game with pictures and words from the story.
11. Highlight different words in the text like names, verbs, etc.
12. Create a Venn diagram to compare characters.
13. Draw a comic strip and add the speech bubbles.
14. Create a website or blog on your favorite topic.
15. Write a letter to the character about how they feel.
16. Keep a journal or diary about new words and study achievements.